

Center for Teaching and Learning

CENTRAL EUROPEAN UNIVERSITY

Invitation to all CEU Faculty:

How might the research on supervision influence our own practices?

Please join us for a lunch-time discussion at the Center for Teaching and Learning with

Lynn McAlpine

Professor Emerita, University of Oxford and McGill University

Tuesday, February 26, 2019, 12:45 – 2:15 p.m.

Nádor u. 13, Room 613

Sandwich lunch will be provided. RSVPs appreciated.

Event website:

If you're like me, doctoral supervision is something I very much enjoy. But I don't find many opportunities to talk about it with others. This workshop is one of those opportunities. What I would like to do is draw on your experience and mine as well as the large body of research on supervision to think about how each of us might want to change aspects of our individual practice of supervision.

Lynn McAlpine, Professor Emerita of Higher Education Development at the University of Oxford and Professor Emerita at McGill University is internationally recognized for her research, conducted in the UK, Europe and Canada, into PhD and post-PhD career trajectories both in and outside the academy. She receives frequent invitations to do presentations and workshops that explore the personal, pedagogical and policy implications of her research.

Lynn has been co-author of the following books:

- McAlpine, L., & Amundsen, C. (2018). Identity-Trajectories of Early Career Researchers: Unpacking the Post PhD Experience. Basingstoke: Palgrave MacMillan.
- McAlpine, L., & Amundsen, C. (2016). Post PhD Career Trajectories: Intentions, Decision-Making and Life Aspirations. Basingstoke: Palgrave Pivot.
- McAlpine, L., & Amundsen, C. (2011). Doctoral Education: Research-Based Strategies for Doctoral Students, Supervisors and Administrators. Amsterdam: Springer.

For more information and for lists of publications please visit <https://www.mcgill.ca/edu-ecp/lynn-mcalpine> or <http://www.education.ox.ac.uk/people/lynn-mcalpine/>